Rari Dance Festival is an international dance festival inserted in nature. In the middle of the natural and artistic-cultural landscape of Rari, Maule Region, Chile, summons dancers, and other scenic artists and body cultists to enter a week of training with internationally renowned teachers. Although, this festival is positioned in the artistic environment responding to the limited offer of high-level technical training available in Chile and Latin America, it is not limited to that; the festival understands that the artistic work is not only sustained from its techniques, and includes within its programming certain complementary activities to strengthen its attendees through the formation of cooperation networks, the transmission of useful tools to the arts of the movement, and part of the natural and artistic-cultural wealth of Rari. In the short term, this festival is established as a space of professionalization for the Chilean and Latin American artistic environment. In the long term, it envisions projecting the regional environment on the international scene.
